How to create a solid foundation of Trust and Community with youth scholars

Co-Create Norms & Routines

Don't apply a uniform approach. Every group will be different because each person has their own needs.

Ensure there are protocols for scholars to hold you accountable when you're trippin.

Encourage scholars to hold each other accountable.

Consistency is critical.

Respect Each Other's Time

Be mindful that scholars are in school for over 6 hours and are only scheduled one break.

Find out what scholars lives consist of outside of school. Be responsive to their realities when planning.

Create a Sustainable Grading System

• Everything you're asking scholars to complete should inform the journey. Cut down on the amount of assignments & consider each task's purpose.

Learn & lean into scholars' expertise

Don't assume what scholars know and don't.

Pose questions / small group discussions as session starters that'll allow you to identify what scholars already know along with misconceptions you'll need to clarify before jumping into a topic / concept.

Create consistent opportunities for scholars to create & lead activities / discussions.

Make space for joy, needs, and rest

Brain breaks, mindfulness, and laughter are just as important as formatives & summatives.

Encourage scholars to name when they aren't in the best headspace to take in the session. Create a protocol & ensure your school has resources to meet SEL needs

Intentionally plan community rest & joy days (in your classroom and as a whole school).
